This is still the best one:

>It began as a joke. I resented my husband's book club and its ability to work through doorstoppers like Matterhorn (597 pages) with surprising alacrity, parsing narrative threads while making wild-game chili. Attempting to fashion a rival club, I found my girlfriends fell into two camps: the book-club-fatigued and the time-crunched. Whereas my mom can juggle two book clubs and seven novels on her Kindle, I can barely get through the ingredients list on my jar of peanut butter, with work, a baby and a Twitter feed all clamouring for my attention. And so I convened the Ladies Short-Form Media Auxiliary. We would drink buttery whites, eat cake and discuss magazine articles, YouTube clips and clever tweets. We'd all be on the same page, but that page wouldn't be in a book.

if you read at the average pace of one page every two minutes, that's thirty pages per hour or 150 pages per working week, 600 pages per working month. if your group meets weekly you could discuss your progress, thoughts on future developments, characters, intrigue, themea, how those might be explored further, and so on. one book a month for a book-of-the-month club seems exactly within reach.

 It's not objective of course, but saying that women are not very good at reasoning without emotion(or more accurately reasoning against their emotions) translates for most people to inferiority. They're also less smart on average, have way fewer geniuses etc.
 You don't really need to listen to me, just go read what Aristotle or whoever said about them, the general picture has not changed for thousands of years, even though we are now living in an amusing anomaly where people pretend otherwise. I doubt it will last long, societies with emancipated women don't have children, they go extinct.

Humans are flawed, and women are told that that course of action is not only ok, but justified in some ways. Are you so perfect that you will never give her a reason to be angry, to consider doing it? I doubt it. And consideration is enough, the mere awareness of the power existing changes things, creates an imbalance between you in her favour.

Of course if you're both good people, then chances are you will be fine, I'm sure. Many people still have happy marriages. But there are no patriachs in the west was my point.

These girls that do that are in my opinion crazy. 98% of my friends haven't had that happen either besides my roommate who's ex is in fact psycho and claimed he hit her when he never did. These few anecdotes, though I do not want to lessen their gravity nor their commonplace occurrence in real life, is not enough for me to say that women are inferior.

>But there are no patriachs in the west was my point.

I have no comment on this. I don't know enough about the science of relationships to say anything. I will say that I think relationships work best with certain roles and the carrying out of such roles.

I've been in a handful of 'serious' relationships(Im still young so they were serious as in we lived together but nothing beyond that), and the girls I was with were all on the whole very fair to me.

But that doesn't mean much, that doesn't translate to married life with kids, or to the majority of relationships I would say. Idk how else to put it but I felt like I was sort of 'in control' of those relationships in a way that your average married man just is not at all.
